Volume XXII

Dedication

Charles Longenecker

He nods sympathetically, then patiently retraces the explanation of the structure of the DNA molecule. Then when he sees understanding light on the faces of his students, he leads them on to other areas of learning.

His hands adroitly find the clear microscopic field, and his students squint their eyes against the lens, fascinated by the color and movement of a drop of blood.

With a twinkle in his friendly, blue eyes, he guides his pupils as they dissect worms, and the hearty laughter spills over when he hears that his enthusiastic dissectors went from class to a lunch of spaghetti and green beans.

But the laughter is replaced by a look of serious earnestness during the spirited discussions of evolution where theories are probed, questions raised, and opinions stated, but where the final authority is always the Bible.

His manner transfers to the young minds before him the sense of reverence with which he regards the function of zygotes, of chromosomes, of genes.

The ringing of the 3:50 bell signifies the end of the school day to many, but his car will be seen in the parking lot until 4:30, 5:00, and sometimes 5:30.

Charles B. Longenecker, we have heard your quick laugh and felt your understanding guidance through the years. As you have dedicated your time and knowledge to us, so we dedicate our 1968 Laurel Wreath to you.

You are the eager students rustling through your Laurel Wreath

Parents and relatives looking for your cousins
and sons

Alumni looking for proofs that your own yearbook was better.

You see us simply as the group of students attending LMS

But the building block of any group is the individual

Dogwood blooming outside LMS chapel in spring

And though part of the mass, each of us is a loner

And constantly aware of the need to know ourselves

Class Poem: 1968

Let us burn deeply, Lord
The night is dark; there are no stars of hope Blind eyes are seeking for a light to guide them;
Let us burn deeply, Lord, that there be light

Let us burn hotly, Lord Cold hands are reaching for a glow of warmth,
And winds of fear that chill the hands may quench our glowing Let us withstand the wind, that there be warmth

Let Us

Let us burn gently, Lord Let there be no acrid smoke, no smouldering.
And let there be no loud, wild flames of pride, Lord
But just a constant, sure, and gentle glow Lord, we are glowing embers on Thy altar;
Let us glow sure and deep, and without falter

Rhoda Weber

Let us burn fully, Lord
We have so much to give, our dreams and youth Let your love be the incense of our burning, Let us burn fully, Lord, and let us give

Burn Deeply, Lord

They are the backbone of LMS, the ones who come to final grips with the problems we only discuss, make the rules about cow paths and knees and snowball battles, and carefully watch our growths and responses. They may be criticized, misunderstood, misinterpreted, but they go on because they believe in us and they believe in LMS.

As freshmen we probe the familiarity of the New Testament and find it new and alive; we walk back through history as sophomores to the Old Testament. As juniors we carry (successively) the yellow, orange, white, and green paperbacks to 209 and Bible Survey. Then we walk down the icy, slushy, or sunny driveway to the ag building in our senior year and tackle head-on the Doctrines of the Bible

Pass-signers and test-givers

"And that's not all," Brother Weaver continues. "After those rogues put a tack on my swivel chair, they hid my overcoat, squashed my hat, and tied my scarf in knots."

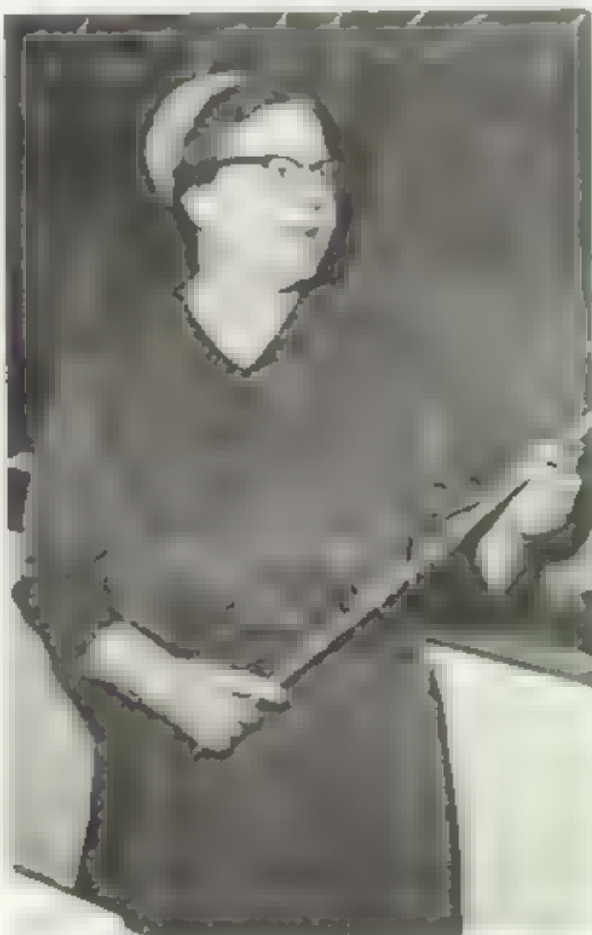

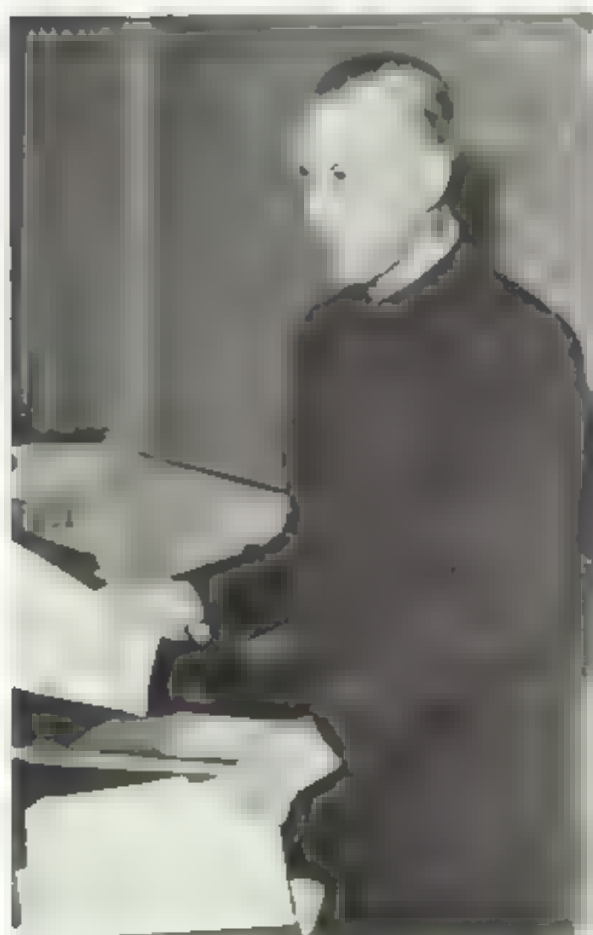

We pore over long columns of bothersome figures that stubbornly refuse to agree with each other. We learn to scrawl hasty lines and dashes of shorthand and frustrate our history teachers when we take notes in it. We type slowly and uncertainly until our typing speed increases from 20 words per minute to 60, and we begin to believe we will make secretaries after all.

We chant conjugations and memorize declensions. We wonder dreadingly how knowing the conjugation of hic, haec, hoc is going to help us to be a better MAF pilot or social worker, but we keep on filling in vocabulary words on the test blanks, and we find ourselves glibly tossing Spanish or German phrases to our fellow bilinguals in the lunch line

We saw through to you

We calculate the areas of cylinders, spheres, and parallelograms. We draw graphs and construct transverse lines. We grow bacteria cultures, focus microscopes on amoebas, and Bunsen burners on test tubes. We watch the pattern of two point sources in the ripple tank and decide that science problems are like life's problems—some of them insoluble.

We learn about man, man as a social creature, man as a barbarian believing he is civilized when he conquers the atom, man of years ago and man today. Home Economics students practice preparing an attractive meal for a sick person during their home nursing study

We are taught the best time to plant crops and how to determine the needs of the soil; we learn how to detect disease in plants. At home we put our knowledge into practice, and look forward to the time when the soil will be our own

We try new recipes, some delectable, some otherwise. We cut and fit and sew, and to our delight find ourselves capable of making most of our wardrobe

We draw and design; we use levels and squares. And we find that wood plus tools plus a bit of ingenuity equals a masterpiece

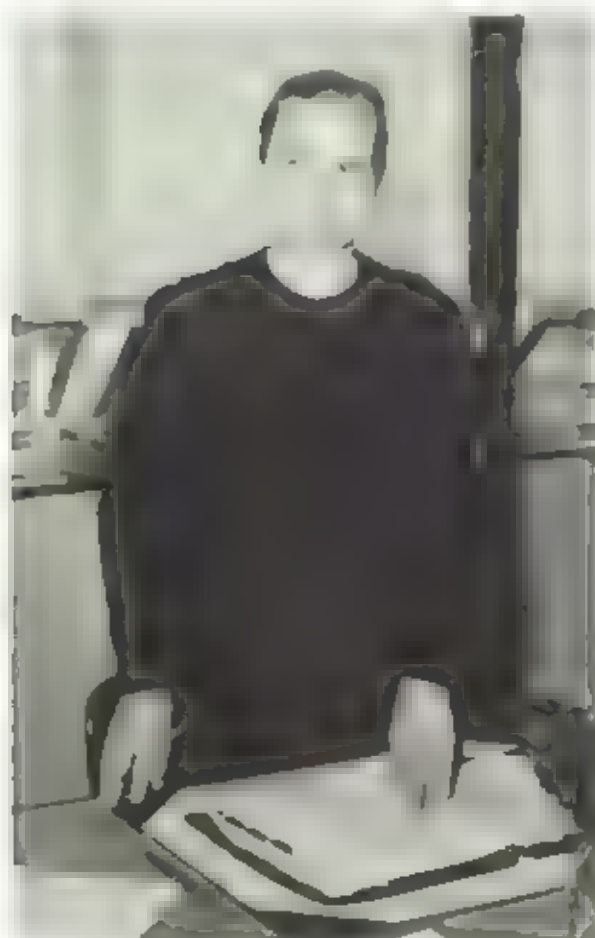

We rustle through homework assignments in the neat orderly rows of Study Hall 100. We walk past the ever-changing bulletin board displays to get passes to walk up the south stairway to the library. Then in groups of threes and fours we sit at the tables and leaf through The Prophet or Mein Kampf, or wander down the rows of 822-999 and 920-929.

Surveys prove that LMS students are forced to study twice as much as students in other Lancaster County schools.

We see the maintenance men mowing the lawns and mopping the floors. They are the ones that pry off the chewing gum we've stuck under our chairs in room 100 or pick up the paper wads carelessly dropped from our lockers.

We see the cooks hurrying around the kitchen faithfully preparing three meals a day, getting to school in the early hours of the morning or staying late at night for dorm students

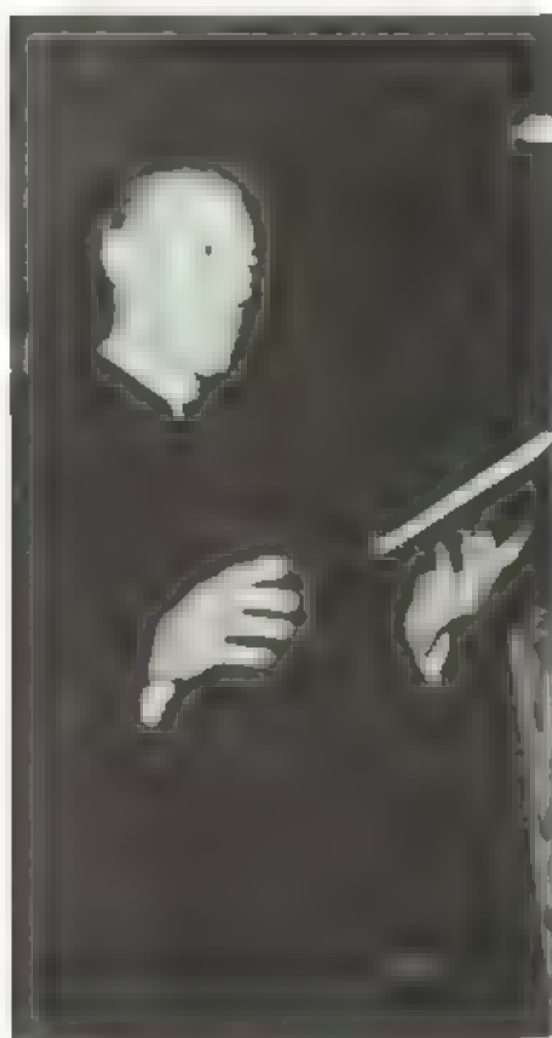

Worship

We grope in the darkness, grasping for the elusive meaning. How can we know God, we ask, if we cannot fathom even ourselves?

We file under the symmetrical arches of chapel to the soft spontaneous singing of "Open the Wells of Grace and Salvation", and seniors usher us into our seats. We listen to the daily round of faculty speakers and respond to the annual revival weeks and spring Bible Conference. We lead singing or present a topic on a Tuesday morning during a student religious program.
Through chapel talks, through quiet meditation, through a meaningful song we meet God in a new way.

But in the quietness and communion of worship, the sharing and understanding of fellowship,

Ruth Harnish chats with evangelist Paul Landis Dorm prayer cells after lights out make God seem nearer as we share our questions with our friends

Studies are laid aside as we pause to take our needs to God in prayer at the beginning of a class period

Fern Elaine Mishler pauses to pray before lunch an Absolute reaches out of the dark nothingness, and we know in faith.

We seek the deeper meaning behind the symbols

It's not until you're on a newspaper staff and have four pages of news to print a month that you really begin to wonder whatever happens on campus. But the news rolls in, the editors delete, revise, and lay out, and once a month everybody stands, book-worm fashion, in the lobbies and parking lot with twenty columns of LMS news

Student Forum

Every other Tuesday after Student Religious they file out of chapel to the Ag building — our student government. They toss around ideas from all-school socials to dining hall procedures and vending machines

Sacrificial Giving groups met to plan their group goals for the traditional Sacrificial Giving campaign on campus, sponsored by Student Forum

Literary Societies

The Herc-Soc tradition marches on. Red-and-white Herc pennants or blue-and-white Soc stars flaunt themselves on sweaters and doorways of the family traditionalists or traitors. The rec hall's ancient wood creaks and shudders under the high-pitched cheers and the feet of Herc and Soc basketball players

'And it's such a purty picture," says Uncle Podger in the Herc kick-off, Hanging a Picture

Juanita sings "Don't I Have a Right to Walk Alone" in the Soc musical, We All Walk Alone, literary kick off

Herculean officers: Daniel King, vice-president; John Gingerich, chaplain; Lucy Bontrager, secretary-treasurer; Doris Martin, advisor; Clinton Yoder, president

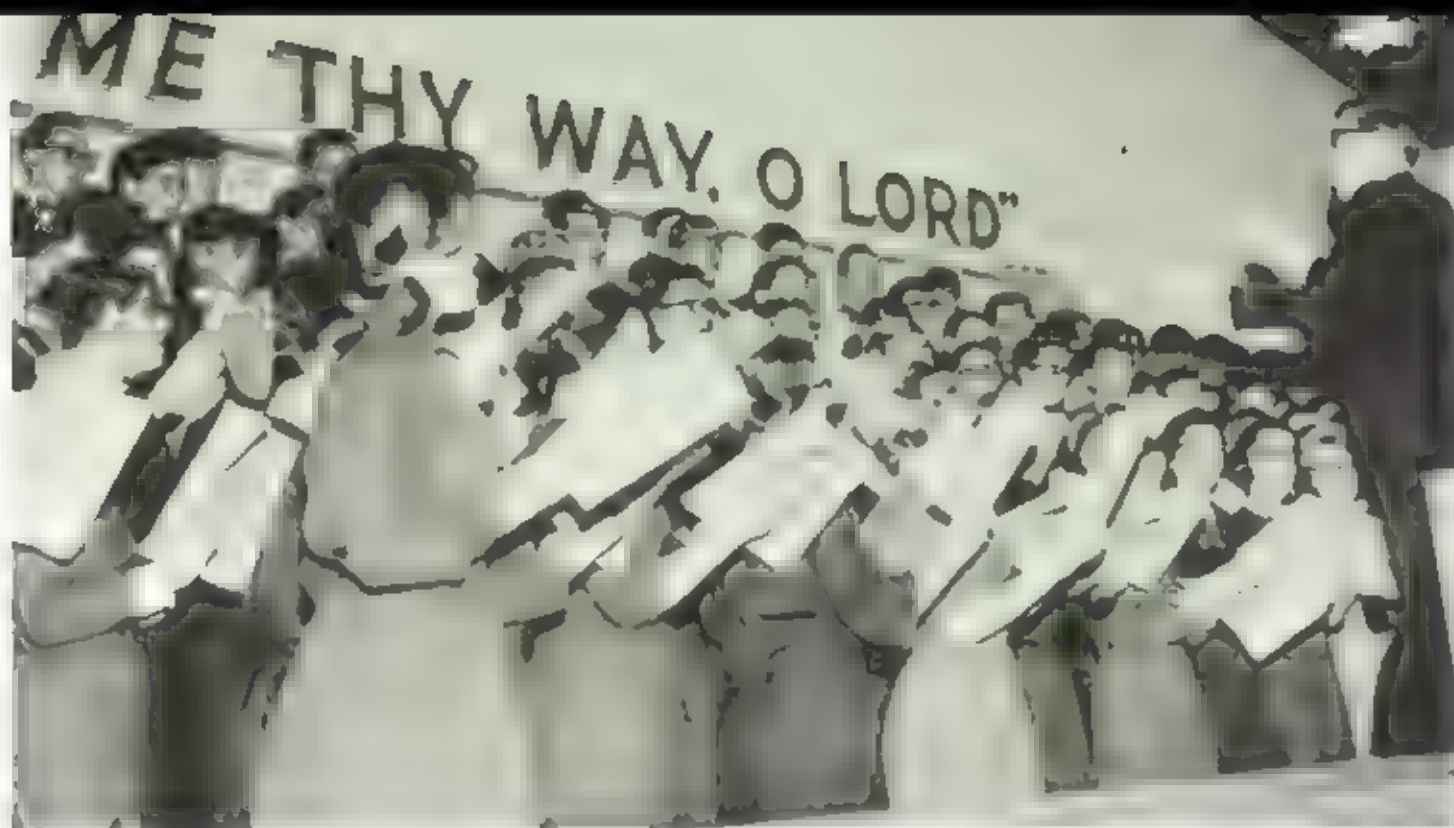

Jun or Chorus

LMS was a dialogue of personalities and abilities, friendships and fellowships over Messiah books.

Senior Chorus

Yet sometimes it seemed we had nothing to give.

We pick up the eight steps to chapel, chattering and noisy, and mob around our monitors to check in. We excuse ourselves all the way through the packed chorus to the second last row, wrangling between people and instinctively looking for the next riser behind us. For forty-five minutes we spend a furious, sweaty practice session, singing and hallelujahs to the Composer of all things.

We listened to the mass swelling four-part voices, and then the insignificance of our own one-part average-quality voices.

Men's Chorus

Select Chorus

Ladies' Chorus

Before a program, chorus members gather in singing knots around Arnold Moshier for a last practice or sit in arrangement on the dining hall chairs, talking and looking over music

We begin practice by bowing our heads and asking God's blessing on our singing. We watch, and our voices respond together to Arnold Moshier's finger movements. We share together in a favorite song, in jokes, in mistakes, Select Chorus tours, and in memories that will never leave us

We listened to the precise blending of sextets,

Senior Ladies Day Sextet

Junior Ladies Sextet

and we learned

Senior Men's Dorm Quartet

We hear their voices come lilting from the balcony as we file into the chapel. They are the old stand-bys, filling in whenever we need a special group to sing. They represent our school in many areas and ways—in community churches and far away areas, or over the air. They sing because they have a God-given song, and they want to share what they have.

Senior Ladies' Dorm Sextet that listening is also part of dialogue.

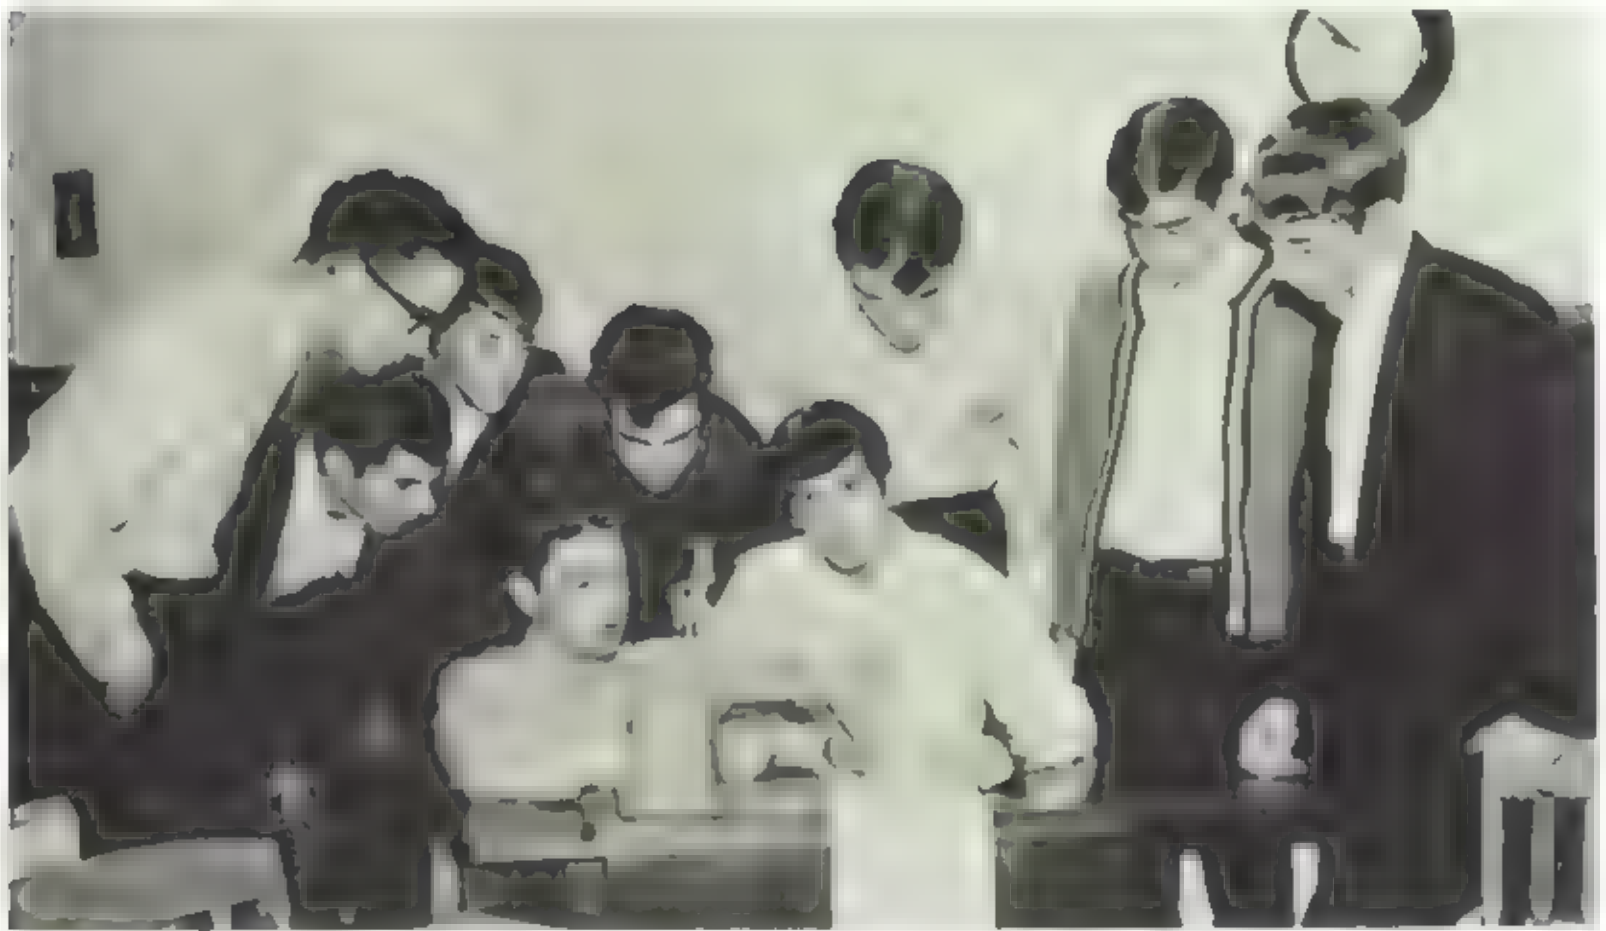

We compartmentalized our talents into clubs

Bird Study

Long walks in the out-of-doors . . . no loud talking or laughing . . . open ears alert eyes . . . notebooks and pencils to record new entries. Rainy days find them indoors testing their knowledge against the bird charts or learning bird calls via records. Instructors Myron Dietz, Elton Moshier and Allan Shirk keep members informed on the dates certain birds will appear in our area. A sparrow's chirp, a robin's throb, a mockingbird's lilt—ask any bird club member to identify them—he can.

Chef's Club

It upon entering the home economics building some Friday afternoon one finds the air smelling of burned food and Alta Hoover and Orpha Newswanger looking distracted and dazed—relax. Things could be worse. It's only the effects of chef's club. (Really, it's not quite that bad. The fellows do turn out some mouth-watering dishes that would raise a girl's eyebrows.) They try to run the sewing machines at the same speed they race their cars—but they actually produce wearable aprons. Excitement, anyone? You'll find it in chef's club. And the best thing about it—provided it's edible—you can eat whatever you make!

Nurse's Club

To all who wish to follow in the steps of Florence Nightingale, Nurse's Club offers a time for airing dreams and expectations. Guided by Rhoda Wenger, the girls discuss the different types of nursing programs. The club has many activities, including a trip to the county home where they present scrapbooks and candles to the guests.

Nurse's Club members listen to a discussion on physical therapy

We learned to know our abilities and to develop them

Did you ever add two and two and get eleven? Math Club members J. Wiff, N. Proof and modern math flourish in club as Stanley Kreider instructs his eager math whizzes.

What is the first thing you would do if you were the first person to come to an accident? Panic? Under Noah Good's direction the First Aid Club members learn basic first aid principles from bandaging to mouth-to-mouth resuscitation.

Foto Fans is designed for our campus camera bags. With Elton Moshier they discuss different types of cameras and how to improve the shots they take.

The Language Club is new this year and is under the direction of Senor Wilbur Lentz. A highlight of their activities was making pinatas for the kindergarten pupils at Locust Grove.

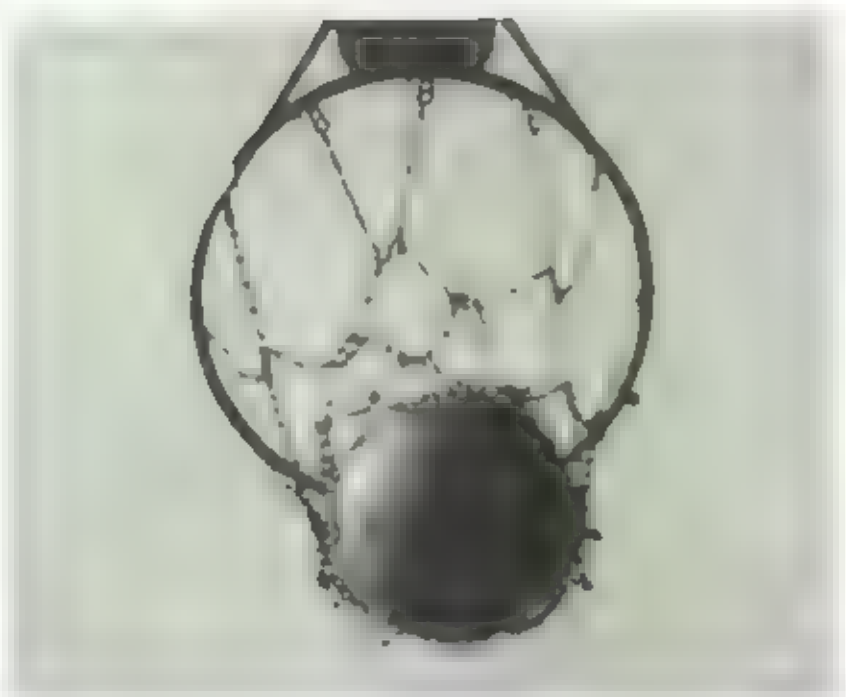

Campus Clean-up was started this year by Wesley McNett and was open to all senior fellows with an excess of study halls on Tuesday. Shrubs are trimmed, trash picked up, and lawns kept immaculate by these ambitious gents

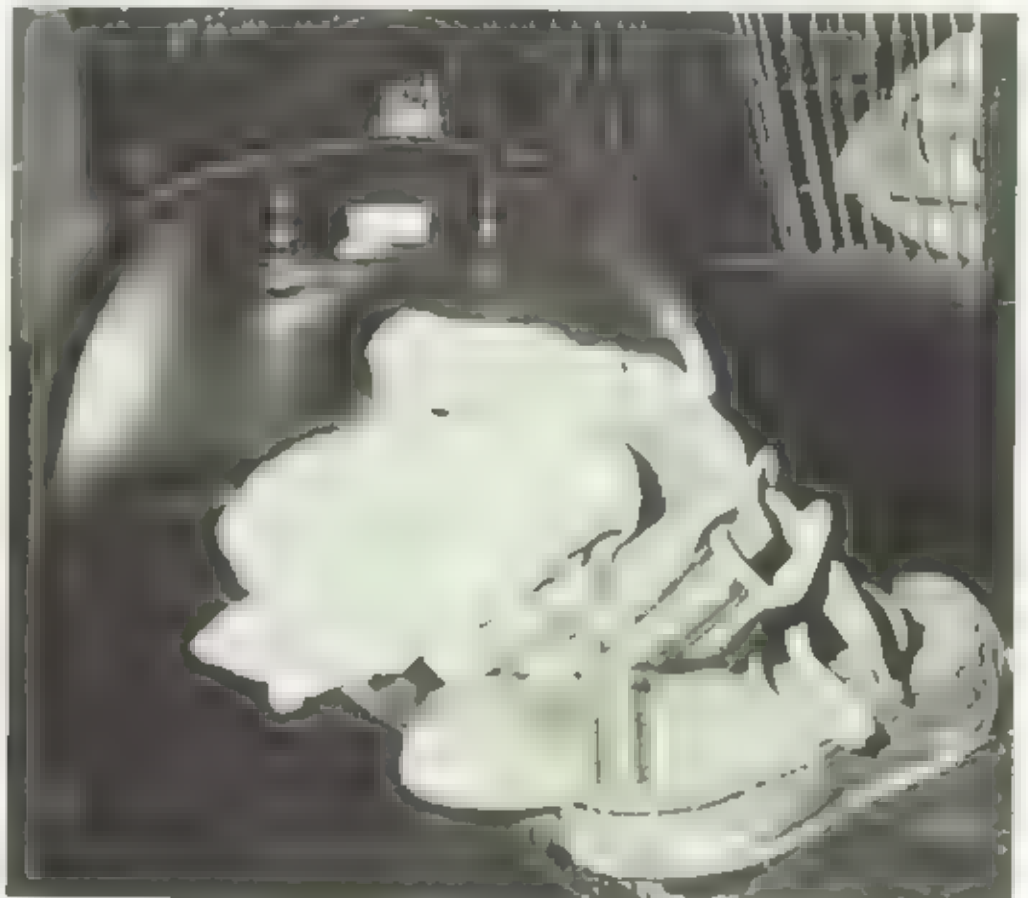

To the high squeak of dit dit dah d t, Ham Radio Club members tap out and translate code. The club made news this year with its first two girl club members
